Team DataSys takes in final regular season Red Sox game

Marlborough, Mass. – September 30, 2007

On Sunday, September 30th, members of “Team DataSys” took in the final game of the Red Sox regular season to celebrate its 12th year in business and the hard work by DataSys team members. Fenway Park was crackling with energy as the Nation celebrated its team’s outstanding record and fantastic individual performances, and readied themselves for the playoff run.

Joining Team DataSys and adding to the ambience was a surprise guest, Sam Horn. Sam passed out buttons to support his candidacy for the President of Red Sox Nation, signed programs, and handed over an autographed baseball. DataSys team members posed for photographs with the jovial Mr. Horn and pledged to support his candidacy.

The game saw a number of highlights, although the Red Sox went down in a 3-2 defeat. Red Sox bullpen ace, Jonathan Papelbon, roused the crowd with his ninth-inning appearance. Manny was being Manny, demonstrating that sometimes teams need to be flexible for the quirky but lovable superstar. Mike Lowell exited in the sixth inning to a well-deserved standing ovation, prompting a unified voice to “sign the guy next year.” Jason Varitek, whose hitting is a source of good-natured debate at DataSys meetings, silenced the detractors with a home run.

According to newly-minted Red Sox Nation fan and DataSys Applications Consultant, Tracy Bohush, ““You simply cannot work at DataSys without catching Red Sox fever. While this outing was not dubbed as a teambuilding exercise, I think I speak for the whole team when I say we all benefited from this opportunity to spend time together outside of the office cheering on our favorite team!”
