DataSys Announces Strategic Partnership with SysCentric Technologies

Marlborough, Mass. – March 24, 2008

DataSys Corporation has made a strategic decision to partner with SysCentric Technologies to provide custom development and integration services to DataSys' customers. SysCentric has a highly-focused mission of providing development and integration services for financial applications, and DataSys has been implementing Great Plains since its inception in 1996.

John McWha, the founder of SysCentric, has been working with DataSys' customers since 2003, and previously worked at DataSys as a Senior Developer. SysCentric has developed numerous custom modules and Web applications, along with deploying several eConnect integrations to DataSys customers.

According to Michael Newman, DataSys' Senior Engagement Manager, "SysCentric's understanding of financial applications is essential to the success of DataSys' customers, along with their commitment to the Microsoft technology platform. John McWha's 25+ years of experience with financial applications is unparalleled—it translates to solutions that work, given the highly effective communication with customers and DataSys.

John McWha of SysCentric echoes Mike's enthusiasm for the working partnership, "Likewise, SysCentric is pleased to be increasing and furthering its commitment to DataSys' customers. We have worked in lockstep with the DataSys staff to provide timely and effective solutions, and formalizing our relationship will augment our track record. Our respective organizations can effectively speak the same language to customers—solutions that work."
